

A Personal Message from Zeke Jabbour

My words don't come as quickly or as easily as in the past. One devastating effect of Parkinson Disease is a gradual deterioration of voice. My voice is softer and more difficult to hear but the disease cannot take away my words of heartfelt thanks for your generosity in helping the multitude of others who now face the problems this disease generates.

I am not the first person to battle PD and I won't be the last. It is my hope that those who follow will benefit greatly from the wonderful strides in research and care being made due to the amazing support of people like you. You are making a difference.

Thank you does not seem adequate but I am grateful for your support of the National Parkinson Foundation on my behalf.

“To the generous mind the heaviest debt is that of gratitude, when it is not in our power to repay it.” - Benjamin Franklin
